History AutoCAD is the name of a product, not a company or an entity. It is an acronym meaning "Automated CAD". The first version was released for personal computers in December 1982. An updated version, AutoCAD 1.0, was released in December 1983. AutoCAD 1.0 was a DOS-based computer-aided design (CAD) software application. It ran on a host PC with an internal graphics card and was designed for use by architects and engineers. The initial version of AutoCAD 1.0 came as a self-installing bootable floppy disk image file and was sold at a retail price of $995.00 (about £590.00 or AU$1200.00) in 1983, but it has been estimated that in 1983 the complete license for a single AutoCAD 1.0 PC installation cost $1,000 (about £550 or AU$1,500). In the second quarter of 1984, Autodesk sold 2,100 units of AutoCAD 1.0. The total number of units of all versions sold to the end of that year was estimated at 6,000, with over 15,000 AutoCAD systems in use. In late 1986, Autodesk introduced AutoCAD 2, a Microsoft Windows-based operating system. This was followed in 1988 with AutoCAD 2, a subscription-based operating system which sold AutoCAD and related accessories, and updated AutoCAD 2 installation packages. The term subscription-based typically means that the user pays an annual subscription fee for the AutoCAD software and related services. In March 1991, Autodesk introduced AutoCAD 3.0, a "value-priced" release for the PC. The software product was released as a bootable floppy disk image file. In 1991, the company introduced AutoCAD for Windows NT, which was available only as a download. The Windows operating system added a host PC graphics card to AutoCAD 3.0. In 1995, Autodesk released AutoCAD 4.0, a release for the Mac platform. In 1997, Autodesk released AutoCAD 2000, a proprietary "value-priced" desktop software release, for the PC. The product included the AutoCAD 2000 drawing package, AutoCAD 2000 DesignCenter, a suite of drawing tools, and AutoCAD 2000 Web Design, a Web-

Visual LISP, Visual LISP is an interface between the AutoCAD system and Visual LISP. AutoCAD MEP In AutoCAD MEP the M Text Engine (MTE) is used to generate text for drawing elements and models. There is also a version of AutoCAD MEP that uses the PDF Text Engine to produce non-printing text. MTE is also the main engine used in the AutoCAD LT. Functionality It uses separate commands for creating drawing objects, creating text strings, and for generating graphic symbols. The commands are not the same as those found in its older predecessor AutoCAD LT. It allows objects to be created by transferring data from an external source. Although this is often used with CAD in the model exchange format, it is also used for the import of files from other vector drawing editors, the usual source being a PDF file. Another source for such transfers is the PDF-A file format. It also enables drawing to be done in two dimensions, a much needed feature that was included in the 2010 release. One of the features of AutoCAD MEP is that once created the text strings can be used in a range of drawing objects. It is now the standard text creation engine of Autodesk. Although there are many alternatives, most of which are free.
