Lateral diffusive transport in the early terrestrial atmosphere. Lateral transport in the early atmosphere is measured with a pulsed thermal xenon lamp. The irradiance is focused onto the ground, and the transport is measured in the direction of the sun. The nighttime irradiance is used to determine the column of pre-to-postsunlight mixing at the observation site. Sensitivity to the entire column of pre-to-postsunlight mixing, between the surface and the top of the atmosphere, is demonstrated for the first time. The measured column is compared with a model with a diffusing surface for which the optical measurements of refractive index and backscatter are available. At the observation site the limiting process of absorption by H_2 , H_2O , and Ar dominates the column of pre-to-postsunlight mixing, while at lower elevations the absorption of O_3 and N_2 is the limiting process. I am always being asked questions about the God I serve. "What is the God you serve? Is he angry? Does he punish? Does he need saving? Is he judgemental? Does he judge? If so, why?" If you want to know whether the God of the Bible is the God I serve, it is not difficult to see.
