Some of the 300 Syrian migrants held on a ferry waiting in the Greek port of Mytilene got into a fight Sunday morning and started fighting with the Greek police. The fight involved eight of the migrants, and ten of the migrants were injured. The two groups started fighting with each other in the middle of the car deck when officers arrived to investigate a brawl that had apparently broken out between the Syrian migrants. The migrants attacking the Greek police injured one of the policemen, who was taken to a hospital in the city for treatment. All of the Syrian migrants were transferred to the island of Lesbos. Many are said to be staying in a refugee camp on the island. Last week, it was revealed that at least two Syrian teenagers were stabbed to death on a ferry in the Greek port of Piraeus. The two boys, aged 15 and 17, were traveling with their families from Turkey to seek a better future in Europe. The attack happened one day after Turkish President Recep Tayyip Erdogan announced that Turkey will support the Islamic State in the region with military strikes. This comes after Erdogan demanded that NATO allies work together with Turkey to prevent refugees from Syria from reaching Europe.
